Commenting On: Brewers limit plate appearances of Yoon to week Brewers limit plate appearances of Yoon to week Email Print Shane Opitz By / | CHICAGO -- The Brewers aren't sure if Milwaukee center fielder Leonys Martin is going to play this weekend, and if he does, he's probably getting only pinch-hit appearances. Manager Ron Roenicke said Thursday that the Brewers would limit Martin's at-bats this week to give him time to heal an injured right wrist. Martin has been on the disabled list since May 19 with a right wrist injury. The Brewers listed Martin as "day-to-day" on their roster Thursday. They first said Martin was expected to return this week. "We're taking it a day at a time," Roenicke said. "We've got to see. If he's good, he's going to get that day off [on Friday] and go play, but if he's not ready, we're going to have to be a little bit careful." The

Brewers are planning to use Martin sparingly this week, possibly pinch-hitting on days where they won't use their 6a5afdab4c

WindowShadez allows you to create panels that can mask your entire desktop or only parts of it using similar images, artless colors or web pages. Customizable GUI, yet intuitive functionality The idea behind the program is to enable you to use layouts that you created from various websites and application to cover up the background, particularly when you cannot maximize the window. Consequentially, working on an application or playing a strategy game because less distracting when your attention is not drawn to other elements. You can use any color you want (the 48 standard ones or one you can create yourself by mixing them), a web page or any other picture you store on your computer. You should know that the utility works with the general image formats, so you can create a new layout using print screen and Paint, for example. On the other hand, it would have been nice if the app included a separate function that enabled you to take the snapshot and customize the layout to surround the active window you are using. A simple app that can boost productivity All in all, WindowShadez does a pretty good job at masking elements that could distract you from playing, reading or working. See the official

What's New In?

The software allows you to cover up all or only some windows of your desktop, so that you can set certain areas of the screen to always view the images of other sites. Such operations are very effective in keeping the screen clean of elements that you do not want to see while you work on a particular application, playing a game, or reading a large article. To do this, you just need to select the area that you want to conceal, press the "Start" key and wait a few seconds. Although its interface looks outdated, WindowShadez has been designed to be efficient enough not to fall short in quality of work. You can use the same cover over all the windows of the computer, as well as specific ones. Select the area you want to cover, close the program, activate the function and customize it using a very simple user interface and intuitive interface. You can select which areas of the desktop you want to conceal, keep them always in view, or cover them up while you focus on a particular application or some other element. One of the strengths of WindowShadez is its ability to cover only the active window. You can select the screen area to be covered up, although it would be more practical for you to specify the size of the area. All information about the window operation is made available in the most convenient way. The size of the window can be hidden as well as the black space outside the area you want to cover. The ready-to-use function is very simple to use, although it takes a little time to set up the cover for the last time. Windows Shaded is a small tool that I came across yesterday that, although it was designed with the purpose of providing cover for all your desktop screens, opens the possibility to show information or images of any kind in the screen that you want, also. When you activate the program, you are directed to the interface and there you can select the image or webpage you want to display over the screen. To enable you to show or hide this image, you can use several functions like a button, as well as a slider. Windows Shaded also has the ability to fade the image in or out as you change the slider. It is also possible to use a black strip to indicate the screen area that will be covered up. To add elements of convenience, Windows Shaded can display various colors. It is easy
